Bibliography

For reasons of space, a bibliography could not be included in the book. This bibliography is divided into two main parts:

- I. Archives consulted (1) for a range of chapters, and (2) for particular chapters. [pp. 2-8]
- II. Printed primary and secondary materials cited in the endnotes. This section is structured according to the chapter plan of Empires of the Imagination, the better to provide guidance to further reading in specific areas. To minimise repetition, I have integrated the bibliographies of chapters within each sections (see the breakdown below, p. 9) [pp. 9-55].

As British artists represented war and empire at home, British agents abroad pursued another kind of cultural imperialism, by collecting and surveying art, architecture and antiquities. Hoock persuasively characterises these activities as public-private partnerships, merging individual initiatives with state interest.Â The Indian nobleman Mirza Abu Taleb Khan, visiting London in 1800, was horrified to see the "high estimation approaching to idolatry" that Britons lavished on classical statuary. "It is really astonishing that people possessing so much knowledge and good sense . . . should be thus tempted by Satan to throw away their money upon useless blocks," he lamented.Â Maya Jasanoff's Edge of Empire: Conquest and Collecting in the East 1750-1850 is published by HarperPerennial.
