Recalling Lost Souls : the Baeu Rodo scriptures tai cosmogonic texts from Guangxi in Southern China / David Holm
Thailand : White Lotus Co., Ltd., c2004
xviii, 310 p.: ill.; 21cm.
Includes Bibliography and Index
Includes 1 CD
974-4800-51-8
$ 25.00

[Recalling Lost Souls explores an indigenous scriptural tradition found among the Zhuang, a Tai-speaking people who inhabit the provinces of Guangxi and Yunnan in southern China. It presents for the first time in English a remarkable collection of ritual texts, recently discovered in the remote highlands of northwestern Guangxi. Written in the 'old Zhuang script', these scriptures are cast in an archaic form of five-syllable verse. They recount how the earth and sky were separated at the beginning of the world, how human beings found water and learned to harness it, how fire was tamed, how rice was domesticated, how domestic animals were first created, and how human institutions like sacrifice, marriage, chieftaincy, and writing came into being. Many of the texts in this collection are recited for the recall of lost souls, much like the suu khwan texts of Thailand and Laos.]

Companion CD provides additional material like sound recordings of recitations, transcriptions, and interlinear word glosses, photographs of the Manuscript pages and a complete glossary and concordance route, with chamdo and some minor monasteries far from the heartland of Tibetan culture. This detailed survey of the cultural monuments of Tibet's outer provinces reveals that Tibetan culture is neither extinct in Tibet proper nor in the outer provinces of Amdo and Kham. Their inhabitants' accomplishments in rebuilding monasteries, restructuring the economy and revitalizing the traditional way of life are among the most fascinating recent events in Asia. Thus the author of this work takes it as his expression of admiration and respect for what Tibetans have accomplished within the last decades.

[The Cultural Monements of Tibet's Outer Provinces : Kham in the ~~Tibeto-Chinese borderlands are not just some bigger lamaseries along the old~~

The author has visited and thoroughly documented many of the unknown sites in Amdo and Kham, among them highly active monastic establishments with hundreds or even thousands of monks, or hidden treasures of Tibet's living and revitalized Buddhist tradition. In presenting this study of the cultural monuments in eastern Tibet, he covered a variety of historical, economic or religio-philosophical aspects in order to explain and evaluate the differences and the common features within the Tibetan cultural context. The wealth of materials has made it both necessary and awarding to publish several volumes dealing with the historical monuments of east Tibet, of which three volumes present the fascinating world of east Tibetans in Kham: vol.1 on those parts administratively belonging to the Tibet Autonomous Region, vol.2 on the Qinghai and vol.3 on the Yunnan and Sichuan parts of Kham.]

[This is a study of the circuit intendant or taotai under the Ch'ing, particularly the Shanghai taotai.

It examines the institutional and historical settings within which the taotai operated and traces the development of the Shanghai taotai office from 1730 through the nineteenth century. The focus of investigation is in examining the adjustment of functions and responsibilities of the taotai and his changing role in the post-opium war era, particularly in the contexts of foreign relations, modernisation and local politics.

Central to the author's interpretation is the concept of "linkage man" or "linkage position". The Shanghai Taotai as a "linkage man" provides vital connection and channel of communication and interaction between two or more separate worlds or value systems and often works as a conflict manager. Part one attempts to portray the Shanghai taotai as a linkage between China and the West. Part Two focuses on the Taotai's duality toward tradition and modernity in his role as modernisation project director and as local administrator of a modernizing city. Part three shows how the taotai as middleman bridged two powerful local elitist groups, the gentry and the merchants, and how his policies catalysed the group - mixing process or "hybridization". ]

[China's economic rise has captured the world's imagination. At the forefront has been the Greater Pearl River Delta, a region consisting of Hong Kong, Macao, and part of Guangdong Province, whose unique and complex complementarities have created a regional powerhouse of global importance. How did the greater pearl River Delta region become one of the world's leading manufacturing centers? Why is the Greater Pearl River Delta region likely to remain in the vanguard of China's economic emergence? What opportunities and challenges does the region present for companies and economies around the World? The greater pearl River Delta and the Rise of China answers these questions and provides unique insights into the one of the world's most dynamics regional economies.

The author show how the Greater Pearl River Delta region has benefited from China's economic opening by combining the international orientation, business experience, and financial muscle of Hong Kong and Macao with the land, labor, and skills of the Chinese mainland. They show how this combination has created an increasing number of world beating industries that have attracted companies and business people from all around the globe. They show how china's accession into the WTO Strengthens the region's position in the national and international economies. Finally, they show how the region's trajectory will lead it to even greater prominence in the future.]

[This book is a collection of theses by more than 30 well-known Chinese and Foreign Economists, such as Professor R. Klein and Professor H. Miller, Winners of the Nobel Prize. The book contains penetrating research and discussions on the present situation and problems of establishing the socialist market economy. These include governmental functions under the market economic system, the reform of enterprises, finance, taxation and distribution, regional development and the futures market, inflation, and resistance to corruption. It has important scientific and theoretical value. This book also includes an appendix of statistical data on China's economic and social development in 1996, providing authoritative materials for the understanding of China's present economic situation and social development. Although these theses presented at the International Symposium on the Market Economy and China in September 1993, they are still topical at present, and this is therefore an important work for an understanding of and research into the practice and theories of China's transition to the market economy.]

This volume is the outgrowth of a conference held at Peking University in May 2002, jointly sponsored by the American Committee on Asian Economic Studies, the Peking University School of Economics, and the China Reform Forum. The contributors include leading scholars from Asia as well as specialists on Asia from the US, Europe, and Australia. The book delves into issues of trade and investment, exchange rates and macroeconomic policy, and preferential trade agreements and other forms of economic cooperation. The overall message is one of regional dynamism animated by concerted efforts to build a favorable institutional environment. China is a great motivating force in this dynamism and a key player in the development of regional agreements.

[This beautifully illustrated social history highlights various aspects of traditional China as seen through the eyes of foreign visitors and residents from the time of the first trading contacts with China in the mid-sixteenth century to the beginning of World War II. The lives and lifestyles of the fascinating mix of people who came to China, as well as the places they visited and the sights and customs that attracted their attention, are set against the backdrop of China's great cities and its ancient culture. A short history of the period sets the scene in each chapter, allowing the reader to follow the dramatic changes that took place through the turbulent years when China moved from feudal empire to republic. The illustrated sections which follow focus on notable themes and topics.

The hundreds of images featured in China illustrated, including early engravings and maps, hand-colored prints, studio portraits and amateur photographs postcards, drawings and cartoons come from the private collection of Arthur Hacker. Collected with the eye of an artist and the knowledge of a historian, they eloquently bring China's social history of life.]

[David Saul Marshall, a distinguished and colourful criminal lawyer, had the distinction of being the first Chief Minister in Singapore between April 1955 and June 1956, while it was still a British Colony.]

During his extensive tour of China in August/October 1956 with a party of 'industrial and commercial observers' from Singapore and Malaya, David Marshall communicated by letter with his brother Meyer in Singapore, relating his experiences and impressions of post-revolutionary China. Those letters comprise the substance of this volume. The significance of these is three-fold :

- They provide an insight by an acutely intelligent observer into public life in China some seven years after the success of the Communist Revolution
- They throw significant light on the shift in the position of the Chinese Government in encouraging the Overseas Chinese Communities to give their loyalties to the country of their domicile.
- They recount David Marshall's successful intercession on behalf of small communities of Jews stranded in China, a number of whom were technically Soviet citizens, who wished to secure exit visas in order to emigrate to Israel.]

[The Nanhai trade was the ancient maritime trade between china and Southeast Asia. China's dealings with the West at this time, extended as far as India and Ceylon and , with a stretch of the imagination, Persia. This study examines the various features of the trade with Southeast Asia, especially the economic background and the Chinese imperial and regional attitudes towards it during the eleven centuries before the foundation of the Sung dynasty in 960- roughly the period from the Han Dynasty to that of the T'ang.]

[As intellectual assets begin to increasingly dominate the world economic scene, intellectual property rights matters have moved to centre stage in the world of international economic relations. In China, however, since it began building its own IPR regime, the nation has been in constant debate on the proper role to accord IPR in its economic development. Even after the nation has put in place an IPR regime based largely on international standards as a result of the WTO accession, the debate is still ongoing. As a keen observer of the transformation of the intellectual property regime in China, the author has produced a timely book that has acutely diagnosed the dynamics of the evolving regime for IPR in China, and unraveled the unique political economy of the regime's interface with the internationalized intellectual property system.]

[This volume deals with contemporary Chinese literature and literary culture, especially with regard to the impact of globalization. The analyses cover the innovative narrative structure of Chinese experimental writings from the mid-1980s to the 1990s, focusing on the relationship between fictional narrative form and contemporary Chinese pre-historical experiences prompted by political, socio-cultural and socioeconomic changes as well as global influences. The theoretical arguments and readings of individual texts are based on the assumption that there is a category of experimental writings that emphasizes narrative innovation and introduces new ways of handling narrative structure.]

[Women's poetry is a critical part of the contemporary Chinese literary landscape. Its impact and its diversity have attracted much attention in China and elsewhere. The Invention of a Discourse is the first book-length study that relates women poets to one another in terms of shared experience, subject matter, poetic technique and language. It also highlights interfaces with their international surroundings. The book diversifies and enriches current scholarship on Chinese and comparative literature from textual, inter-textual and contextual perspectives.]

LEGITIMACY : Ambiguities of Political Success or Failure in East and Southeast Asia /edited by Lynn White

Singapore : World Scientific, 2005

328p.

9812560920

Series on Contemporary China - Vol. 1

$ 82.00

This book documents the bases for a new view of legitimacy in general and in various parts of Asia, including China, Malaysia, South Korea, Taiwan and Japan. The authors see legitimacy anywhere as always partial, rather than total, and somewhat measurable. Legitimacy is specifically political, rather than more vaguely socioeconomic. It can be a predicate of various sizes of collectivity, not just of a sovereign government, or of policies, or of leaders. It can be challenged by patriotism. Legitimacy derives not just from scientific norms or technocracy, even in modern times. It is a belief whose alternative (illegitimacy) people may often suppress in their minds until external situations change, bringing an unexpected cascade of altered legitimacy.

Contents:

Dimensions of Legitimacy (L White)

Political Legitimacy in Malaysia: Regime Performance in the Asian Context (B Gilley)

The Basis of Political Legitimacy in Late-Authoritarian Taiwan (D D Yang)

[This paper examines the main contours of Beijing's Tibet policy since the start of the reform era (1979 to the present). It argues that throughout this period China's position on Tibet has always been concerned with defending Chinese sovereignty, over the region.

This essay contends that three forces were crucial in determining Chinese policy on Tibet during these two period the underlying strategic value of Tibet to Beijing within the regional security dynamic, the persistence of historically conditioned sovereign-centric values within elite circles in China, and the internal and external pressures created by Deng Xiaoping's reform and opening line.]

[A Dutch sinologist, Hans Kuijper, once wrote that if you do not apply a model or theory in your study of Chinese (Communist) affairs, you are a pseudo-scientist. He explained that "science" could be defined as a kind of knowledge" and described "science to be the search for systematized knowledge [italics in original]. "Noted historian professor wang gungwu had said that there were many problems with Western books on Zhongguo (china). Yu Ying-shih, another well-known history professor had stated that it was not proper to apply theories in the West to study Zhongguo.

As a response to these difficulties, this book attempts to use a series of dialectical models to study mainland china since October 1949. ]
